LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., June 11, 1901.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for publication as a bulletin, a gazetteer of Porto Rico. The place names here given are derived mainly from the report of the recent census of the island and from the War Department map, on the scale of 1:150,000.

It is my belief that the publication of this bulletin will go far toward preventing conflicts in the spelling of these place names.

Very respectfully,

HENRY GANNETT,
Geographer.

Hon. CHARLES D. WALCOTT,
Director U. S. Geological Survey.

A GAZETTEER OF PORTO RICO.

By HENRY GANNETT.

INTRODUCTION.

Porto Rico is the fourth in size of the West Indian Islands, being exceeded by Cuba, Haiti, and Jamaica. Its area, as measured from the best map available—that issued in 1899 by the War Department, on a scale of 1:150,000—is 3,600 square miles. There is, however, much uncertainty concerning the accuracy of these figures, as the coast line of the island has never been carefully surveyed. It lies east of Haiti, between latitudes $17^{\circ} 50'$ and $18^{\circ} 30' N.$, and between longitudes $65^{\circ} 30'$ and $67^{\circ} 15' W.$

Under the jurisdiction of Porto Rico, as a colony of Spain and subsequently as a dependency of the United States, are included, besides the island of Porto Rico, the small islands Vieques and Culebra to the east and Mona to the west, as well as a number of islets adjacent to the coast.

The Indian name of the island was Borinquen. The name Porto Rico is a corruption of the proper name Puerto Rico, and is the form which has been in common use for centuries among English-speaking nations; the form Puerto Rico (rich harbor) being that in use by the residents of the island, by all Spanish-speaking peoples, and generally by other nations. The United States Board on Geographic Names, pursuing its principle of following local usage, adopted this form several years ago. Since the acquisition of the island by the United States, usage, even in the publications of the United States Government, became divided, some of them following the above decision, others using the form Porto Rico. In this condition of affairs, the Board appealed to the President of the United States for a decision, and the President decided in favor of Puerto Rico. Subsequently, however, in the Foraker bill for the government of Porto Rico, a clause was incorporated providing that the name be Porto Rico. This bill, agreed to by both Houses of Congress and signed by the President, became law, and thus established the spelling of the name.

Porto Rico is roughly rectangular in shape, with a length from east to west of about 100 miles and a breadth of about 35 miles. Its coast line is simple, with few good harbors, that of San Juan, the capital, on the north coast, being the best. The island is traversed through its length by a range of hills, which, starting at the northwest corner, swings in a broad curve southeast, then east, and finally northeast to the northeast corner. This range forms the main watershed of the island, and throughout most of its extent lies south of the middle of the island, giving longer courses, gentler slopes, and greater drainage basins to the northward-flowing streams, those flowing south having steep descents and short courses. These hills range in height from 2,000 feet in the gaps to 3,800 feet on the highest summits, the most elevated point in the island being El Yunque, at the northeast extremity of the range. These hills have considerable breadth, and within them the streams have cut deep valleys, giving to most of the island a steep, hilly surface. The coasts are in most parts bordered by broad extents of low, level lands.

None of the streams are navigable except for a mile or two near their mouths, where they are, in effect, estuaries.

Most of the area of Porto Rico has for centuries been divided into farms, and more than one-fifth of the island is under cultivation; hence the forested areas are few and small and of little importance. Timber is very scarce and most of that used in building is imported.

Lying within the Tropics, Porto Rico is within the region of the northeast trade winds. The annual temperature at San Juan, on the north coast, ranges from 78° to 82°. The range of monthly temperature is from 75° in January to 82° in August, while the maximum temperature on record is 99° and the minimum is 57°, indicating a very uniform climate. On the hills of the interior the temperature is, of course, lower. The annual rainfall at San Juan is 60 inches, and on the northeast coast is greater, reaching 100 inches, while in the southern part of the island it is much less, so much so that in some localities irrigation is necessary for the cultivation of crops.

Porto Rico is divided, for governmental purposes, into 7 departments and 69 municipal districts or terminos municipales. These in turn are subdivided into barrios.

Discovered by Columbus in 1493 and visited frequently in succeeding years, the island was not colonized by the Spaniards until 1509, when San Juan, at first called Caprera and later Puerto Rico, was founded and possession was taken of the entire island. In 1597 it was captured by the English, who, however, soon withdrew, and from that time until possession was taken by this country in 1898 Spain has held the island, although several attempts have been made upon it by the forces of various countries. During all this period Porto Rico has been free from internal dissensions, such as have repeatedly wasted the neighboring island of Cuba.

The population of Porto Rico in 1899 was little short of a million—953,243. The following table gives the population at various periods:

Year.	Population.	Rate of increase per decade.
		Per cent.
1765	44,883
1775	70,250	57
1800	155,426	37
1815	220,892	26
1832	330,051	27
1846	447,914	24
1860	583,308	21
1877	731,648	14
1889	798,565	09
1899	953,243	16

The density of population, or the number of inhabitants to a square mile, was in 1899, 264. The island is very thickly populated, especially when one considers that nearly all the population is rural. Few of the States of this country are as densely populated.

The following table gives the area, population, and density, by departments, in 1899.

Departments.	Area.	Population.	Density of population.
	Square miles.
Aquadilla	240	99,645	415
Arecibo	621	162,308	261
Bayamon	542	160,046	295
Guayama	561	111,986	200
Humacao	413	88,501	214
Mayaguez	407	127,566	313
Ponce	822	203,191	247

The urban population forms but a small element, there being but four cities of more than 8,000 inhabitants each—San Juan, the capital, with 32,048; Ponce, on the south coast, 27,952; Mayaguez, on the west coast, 15,187, and Arecibo, 8,008. These cities had a combined population of 83,195, or only 8.7 per cent of the total population.

In respect to sex, females outnumbered males by 8,721 only, the proportions being 49.5 per cent males and 50.5 per cent females.

As to race, there were 589,426 whites and 363,817 colored, or 61.8 per cent white and 38.2 per cent colored. These proportions have differed greatly at different times in the past, the colored having in early days been in the majority, as may be seen by the following table.

Year.	Percentage of—
	White.	Colored.
1802	48	52
1812	46.8	53.2
1820	44.4	55.6
1827	49.7	50.3
1830	50.1	49.9
1836	52.9	47.1
1860	51.5	48.5
1877	56.3	43.7
1887	59.5	40.5
1899	61.8	38.2

Of the total colored in 1899, 83.6 per cent were reported as of mixed white and negro blood, only 16.4 per cent being pure negroes.

The following table shows the distribution, by percentages, of the white and colored in the seven departments.

	Percentage of—
	White.	Colored.
Aquadilla	85.6	14.4
Arecibo	77.1	22.9
Mayaguez	64.3	35.7
Ponce	59.6	40.4
Guayama	50.7	49.3
Bayamon	48.9	51.1
Humacao	46.1	53.9

The colored are more numerous proportionally in the eastern than in the western part of the island, and more numerous near the sea-coast than in the interior.

At the time of its discovery the island was well populated by Indians, who were promptly subjugated and enslaved by the Spaniards. Harsh treatment, labor, and disease rapidly reduced their numbers, so that by 1543 they were practically exterminated, and at the present time no trace of Indian blood is to be found in the island.

With the diminution in number of Indian slaves negro slaves began to be introduced, and throughout the eighteenth century and three-fourths of the nineteenth the slave trade was actively prosecuted, and ceased only about 1873, in which year negro slavery was abolished.

The number of foreign born was 13,872, or only 1.5 per cent of the population. More than half of these were of Spanish birth, and 43 per cent of them were found in the three largest cities.

As to conjugal condition, 69.7 per cent of the people were single; 16.6 per cent were married; 8.8 per cent were living together by mutual consent, having waived, mainly on account of its expense, the ceremony of marriage, and 4.9 per cent were widowed. The proportion of the single was very large, and that of the married, even if those living together by mutual consent be included, was very small. In part this may be accounted for by the fact, established by the census, that the proportion of children was very large and that of adults correspondingly small. There are few aged persons in the island.

Of the total population, only 16.6 per cent, or one-sixth, were able to read. The proportion was much greater in the large cities than in the rural districts, and was much larger among the whites than the colored.

The persons engaged in gainful occupations were 33.1 per cent of the total population, a proportion somewhat smaller than in the United States. This may probably be accounted for by the greater proportion of children in Porto Rico. Of the males, 56.9 per cent were breadwinners; of the females, only 9.9 per cent. Classifying the breadwinners by groups of occupations, it appears that 62.8 per cent of them were engaged in agriculture, 20.5 per cent in personal and domestic service, 8.4 per cent in manufactures, 7.6 per cent in trade and transportation, and 0.7 per cent in the professions. The leading occupation, in which more than two-thirds of the breadwinners were engaged, was that of labor.

Of the entire area of Porto Rico, 3,606 square miles, including the adjacent islands, 2,743 square miles were, in 1899, included within farms. This is 76 per cent of the area. The land under cultivation was 747 square miles, or 21 per cent of the total area, a proportion larger than that cultivated in the United States, and yet a small proportion when one considers the density of the population and the fact that it is almost entirely rural. There were 39,021 farms, with an average area of only 45 acres and an average cultivated area of but 12 acres. In the United States the average area under cultivation per farm in 1890 was 78 acres. Ownership of farms was almost universal, not less than 93 per cent of the farms and 91 per cent of the farm area being owned by their occupants. The farms owned by whites were, as a rule, larger than those owned by the colored.

The leading farm product of Porto Rico is coffee, which was planted upon not less than 41 per cent of the total cultivated area. While coffee was produced in all parts of the island, its culture is more general in the hilly central and western parts. Sugar cane holds second rank as a product, occupying 15 per cent of the cultivated lands, its area of cultivation being mainly the coast lands all around the island. Bananas occupied 14 per cent of the cultivated land; sweet potatoes, 8 per cent; indian corn, 4 per cent; rice, 2 per cent; cocoanuts, 2 per cent, and tobacco only 1 per cent of the cultivated land.

Manufactures are few and of trifling importance. No mining of any kind is at present carried on in the island, although in times past valuable gold placers were worked by the Spaniards. It is by no means improbable that thorough prospecting may develop valuable mineral resources hitherto unsuspected.

Means of internal communication are very scanty. There are altogether 159 miles of railroad in the island, but they are in disconnected pieces and closely parallel the coast, none extending into the interior. There is one good wagon road extending across the island from San Juan to Cayey and thence to Ponce, with a branch from Cayey to Guayama, and short roads in other directions, the total length of good roads in the island being about 285 miles. These were built by the Spanish authorities for military purposes. Aside from these, the so-called roads of the island are mere trails, few of them passable for wheeled vehicles at any time, and commonly only for saddle animals or foot travel.

As a result of this condition, internal trade is very small in volume and is confined mainly to the coast line. Indeed, there are few civilized communities whose individuals are so nearly isolated and have so little intercommunication as this.

In 1897 the total assessed value of property was $28,867,928, and the true value was estimated to be $150,000,000, or about $170 per capita of the population. The average per capita wealth of the people of the United States is estimated to be in excess of $1,000, a comparison which speaks volumes concerning the poverty of the people of Porto Rico. The mortgage indebtedness of the people in 1897 was not less than $18,610,000.

In 1899 the facilities for education consisted, in the main, of public schools. Of 467 schools 412 were maintained at public expense, the remainder being private schools. All the schools had a seating capacity of but 29,164. The number of teachers was 623, and the number of pupils in attendance was 27,018. The number of children attending school was but a small part of those of school age. The prevailing religion is, of course, the Catholic, with which church practically all the population are connected.
