In June 1972, extensive flooding occurred along Canisteo Creek in western New York, causing severe damage to properties and infrastructure. The floodwaters were so intense that many structures were severely damaged or destroyed. The extent of the flooding and the damage caused are clearly depicted in this map, which shows the flood extent and affected areas. The map also includes contour lines and other topographical features to provide a comprehensive view of the geographic conditions during the flood event.