

Figure 3. Map showing shaded-relief image of the sea floor created by exaggerating the bathymetry ten times and then artificially illuminating the relief by a light source positioned 30 degrees above the horizon from an azimuth of 45 degrees. This illumination reduces some of the artifacts in the along-track direction visible in the companion image on sheet 1, and enhances the northwest-southeast-trending bathymetric features on the continental rise.